

Silvia Florescu is MD, PhD, currently at National School of Public Health, Management and Professional Development from Bucharest, Romania. She received the title of public health and management specialist in 1994, of researcher in 2005 and her PhD in 2008. Graduated nationally or internationally certified courses regarding the administration of research instruments, the management of social and health services, the management of hospital services, health promotion, evidence based medicine and comprehensive systematic review.

Worked in quality of consultant for World Bank Project, for PHARE Basis Consortium and as principal investigator, research representative or module leader for Romania in some international and regional research projects as European Study Project on Alcohol and Others Drugs (ESPAD) (1999, 2003, 2007 and 2011), the Reproductive Health Survey (1999), World Mental Health Initiative (2005-2007), in projects of European Seventh Framework Programme (FP7) or DG SANCO, UNICEF. Member of European Public Health Association, member of World Mental Health Survey Consortium since 2005, member in EUPHA Scientific Committee, coordinator of Evidence Based Public Health Affiliate Center of Joanna Briggs Institute, wrote about of 40 articles or communicated in national and international conferences about drugs, mental health, reproductive health, nosocomial infection. Interested in methodology, is lecturer for biostatistics, epidemiology, evaluation, systematic review modules within postgraduate training programs. Coordinated as principal investigator Romania Mental Health Survey and co-authored with her team some articles.